THE SIXTEENTH CHAPTER.
The Last!

"N" "Look here, Wharton—"
"Oh, get on with it!"
"Ever Wharton, coming up the stairs, the landing, Roman's passage heard that exchange of words, at the doorway of Study No. 1.
"Holding up Vernon Smith was standing at the doorway of the study, with a smile on his face. Wharton, so gracefully, was within. The expression of the Roman's,
in fact, was seated at the study table,
going over the new case at hand, Roman's hand interrogated him—and was promptly the reception he might have expected from the skipper he kept in dope.

"Cut it out, beauty," came Wharton's voice softly. "You're not as down town, and first of all, not having a chance of doing it again."

"I'll stick to games like glue—"

"Listen you, Sappho, to have an appointment with Fay & Co. to play billiards sometime," said Wharton earnestly. "Don't talk out."

"You've got to make up a town number," said the Reader softly.

"You're not still thinking of that gray-eyed Wilton, I suppose."

"He won't sneak out through smoking cigarettes just before the game, anyhow. You might?"

tramped after him as he went, then glancing after him in the study doorway,
the new junior, in the study doorway, looked in.

Wharton sat at the table, with a booked over his football list.

He wanted, if he could, to take a winning team over to Ropkeston, and it was a worry on his mind that the best man in the eleven had let him down. The Bomber had failed him, and the head hope he had entertained that Wilcox might prove to be the right man in the right place had failed him also. It was Nugent or nobody, him also, as he was to play his best and, least as he was afflicted with doubts.

His face hardened. Since the interrupted fight in the Rag the two had not exchanged a word. Wilmet was seldom in the study, and when he was there a freezing silence reigned. The feeling on Waverley's side was aversion and contempt; on Wilmet's it seemed to be absolute indifference.

But there was a change in Wilmet's look at the moment. He opened his lips to speak, but closed them again uncertainly, and Wharton came towards the door. Wilmet stepped in.

"What do you want? You're barred in this study, and you know it! Get it off your chest if you've got anything to say, and get it short!"

"I teased you terribly the other day," mumbled Wilmet.

"No," said Walnut quietly; "I knew it at the time. But if you'd known how much I wanted to get out of gates that afternoon, I think you might make allowance. I had a particular reason, though I can't tell you what it was—"

"Leave it at that. I had a row with you afterwards, but you needn't worry about that. You had the best of it, and I was very nearly done when Wingate landed in and stopped us—"

"No need to say so again."

"You don't make a fellow," said Wilcox. "but you're in a difficulty now."

"Don't tell me you care about it. I shouldn't believe it."

"From what I hear, was your best friend?"

"What about it?"
 "You want a man in his place?"
 "Any one you like?"
 "Wharton stared at it."
 "You?"

"Yes, I don't know what Smash is like when he's gone up nation football ever since I here. But I think I'm as ever was. I won't let me wound too."

word for it, but if you came in a pick-up game I'll let yourself. I never meant to play here—I was going to check with everything else—but since I was alone—

Wharton looked at him.

"Yes, that's true."
"Then I was on the right track all?"
Wilmet smiled faintly.
"Yes," she answered.

"Yes," he answered. "I'll be glad to fill that place in the team in the Rockwood game."

"And you think I'd trust you," the captain of the Roman navy said. "I don't know what you mean, or what you say, or what you're pulling my leg again—but I'm

"Yes," said Walnut, "a lot of people are all right."

Figure 1. Aerial view of the study area. The area is divided into three main sections: the northern section (top), the central section (middle), and the southern section (bottom). The northern section is characterized by a dense forest of tall trees, while the central and southern sections are dominated by a dense forest of shorter trees. The area is bounded by a road on the left and a river on the right.
